Are you making the right choices?

How do you choose a particular treatment or procedure?

Do you rely on habit, an old text book you've had since medical school, or the recommendations of a colleague?

With over two million health research papers published each year it is impossible to keep up to date with the latest information, with the result that many doctors rely on outdated, sometimes lethal techniques when treating patients.

Now at last there is an alternative. The Cochrane

Database of Systematic Reviews is a regularly updated electronic journal which will give information on the effects of health care to help you make better choices based on reliable research evidence.

This information is based on systematic reviews carried out by a growing international network individuals contributing to the Cochrane Collaboration.

Now available on disk and CD-ROM through the BMJ Publishing Group, these reviews will be updated twice-yearly with the latest findings and critical feedback from users, so you can confident that information at your fingertips is current and reliable.

This first issue contains:

1 reviews dealing treatment of problems pregnancy and childbirth, subfertility, stroke, schizophrenia, and parasitic diseases. PLUS protocols and titles for 134 reviews currently in preparation on these subjects. and musculoskeletal disease, oral health. respiratory infections, inflammatory bowel disease.

> bibliography previously published systematiic reviews.
